When people think of pirates, they usually imagine one-eyed men with beards and swords fighting over buried treasure. But even in this age of satellites and instant communication, pirates still attack ships on the high seas.

The worst areas for piracy are the coasts of South America, South East Asia, and Africa. Modern pirates are usually armed with machine guns, speedboats, and mobile phones.

In a typical attack at least 10 men in a high-speed launch will follow a freighter, on which an insider has usually been planted beforehand to provide location and freight details. Once boarded they will either hijack the ship for its cargo, or, more typically, go straight to the captain's safe, which usually contains tens of thousands of dollars in petty cash.

Sometimes the ship is repainted and given a new name, and false documents are used to create a new identity for the vessel. The pirates' preferred cargo is tin, oil, and aluminum. Usually, the heist is well-planned in advance on land. As soon as the ship is successfully boarded, a deal is made to exchange the cargo for money.

On a Mid September day, British climbers Rachel Kelsey and Jeremy Colenso were climbing in the Swiss Alps. They were both experienced climbers and when they started, the weather was good. They reached the summit but as they started the climb down, an electric storm struck the mountain.

Snow began to fall, making it difficult to see where they could put their hands and feet on the rock. After several frightening minutes, they found a narrow ledge and climbed on to it, hoping the snow would stop and they could climb down.

The snow did not stop and the temperature dropped to -5C. They decided that they had to get help. Rachel had brought her mobile phone with her. She was unable to contact the mountain rescue service on her mobile phone and the only number contacts she had were in London. She sent a text message at 1.30 am to five friends in the UK. It read: 'Need heli rescue off north ridge of Piz Badile, Switz'. They were all asleep.

At 5.00 am Avery Cunliffe got the message. He jumped into action and immediately contacted the rescue services in Geneva. He texted Rachel back saying: 'I'm on the case'. Even then, rescue was impossible because of the treacherous weather and the mountain rescue team had to send a text message to Miss de Kelsey telling her she would have to spend a second night on the mountain. They could reach the stranded couple only at 8.15 am the next day. At about 1.00 pm they were lifted off the mountains in helicopters.

First introduced in 1927, The Hardy Boys Mystery Stories are a series of books about the adventures of brothers Frank and Joe Hardy, teenage detectives who solve one baffling mystery after another. The Hardy Boys were so popular among young boys that in 1930 a similar series was created for girls featuring a sixteen-year-old detective named Nancy Drew. The cover of each volume of The Hardy Boys states that the author of the series is Franklin W. Dixon; the Nancy Drew Mystery Stories are supposedly written by Carolyn Keene. Over the years, though, many fans of both series have been surprised to find out that Franklin W. Dixon and Carolyn Keene are not real people. If Franklin W. Dixon and Carolyn Keene never existed, then who wrote The Hardy Boys and Nancy Drew mysteries?

The Hardy Boys and the Nancy Drew books were written through a process called ghostwriting. A ghostwriter writes a book according to a specific formula. While ghostwriters are paid for writing the books, their authorship is not acknowledged, and their names do not appear on the published books. Ghostwriters can write books for children or adults. Sometimes they work on book series with a lot of individual titles, such as The Hardy Boys and the Nancy Drew series. The initial idea for both The Hardy Boys and the Nancy Drew series was developed by a man named Edward Stratemeyer. The initial ghostwriter for The Hardy Boys was a Canadian journalist named Leslie McFarlane. A few years later, Mildred A. Wirt, a young writer from Iowa, began writing the Nancy Drew books.
